*The statute does not define the term "locksmith". Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines a locksmith as follows: "a worker who makes or repairs locks." It is the position of vendor that the term "locksmith" may be deemed to include an individual or organization, a reasonable and substantial portion of whose job description includes the activities normally associated with a locksmith as that term is defined, for example, but not by way of limitation, the security or maintenance department of a hospital, tow truck operator, and so forth.
